Warmth around the dining table comes as much from the atmosphere of the room as the people gathered within it. The Driftwood Upholstered Arm Chair in the Worn Saddle finish adds to that inviting spirit with a warm brown wood frame inspired by the burnished beauty of supple leather and hand tooled heirlooms. Beige performance fabric softens the seat and back, while open wood arms and an open back create a graceful silhouette with a relaxed sense of refinement. Generously proportioned arms invite guests to settle in comfortably, while the neutral upholstery provides a sophisticated counterpoint to the warmth of the wood. Performance fabric brings practical ease to the design, making its tailored elegance equally appropriate for everyday meals and special occasions. At the head of any Driftwood dining table, the chair adds a gracious sense of distinction while remaining true to the collection's comfortably collected character. It creates the kind of seat that encourages another course, another conversation, and a little more time spent together.
